

The Shuman Law Firm Investigates Amedisys, Inc.

BOULDER, CO June 18, 2010 – Advertising Material – The Shuman Law Firm today announced that it is investigating potential breaches of fiduciary duty by certain officers and directors at Amedisys, Inc. (“Amedisys” or the “Company”) (NASDAQ: AMED). Amedisys provides home health and hospice services, including skilled nursing and home health aide services, physical, occupational and speech therapy, and medically oriented social work to individuals who require ongoing care.

The investigation concerns allegations that the Company has been taking advantage of the Medicare reimbursement system by increasing the number of in-home therapy visits to their clients, some of which were allegedly not medically necessary. On May 13, 2010, the Wall Street Journal reported that the Senate Finance Committee (the “Committee”) had launched an investigation into whether Amedisys and certain other in-home therapy providers “deliberately boosted the number of home therapy visits to trigger higher Medicare reimbursements.” The Committee sent letters to the chief executives of the companies requesting information about the companies’ therapy visits from 2006 through 2009 and their financial relationships with referring physicians.
